Dear Dr. Lederberg:

Thank you for the group of fine reprints, which I read at once. I am envying your young people who can take part in the analysis of these exciting new developments, with surprises over surprises. The older must be grateful if we can still follow the new lines and try to put the new in a proper niche of our way of thinking. I am glad that I was a student of Kessel in my young days and thus able to follow things without too much strain. I have just published a "Theoretical Genetics" where I tried to find a unified picture of old and new facts as analyzed for a theoretical round-up.

You might be interested in it and I hope you will not find me already antiquated, though that can happen nowadays in the interval between writing and publishing (almost $1\frac{1}{2}$ years).

Best regards

yours sincerely

B. Goldstein
